“ My big sister;

You always had that big smile for me, no matter what. There are memories that I have of you/us.

Growing up on the farm, we would ride our horses through the fields between our house and our grandparents house. Not real horses mind you. You rode the mop and I rode the broom. We had fun fantasizing our life on the farm, much to the dismay of our grandparents because they had to go looking for their mop and broom after we dropped them wherever. We didn't have a lot, but we had each other.

Another memory that sticks in my head. When our basketball team would come back into town from an away game, all the players would disperse to their groups for the evening. You worked at a nearby restaurant. I would come by and spend my time with you. You would always greet me with that huge smile and ask if we won or not. You would then scold me for not going out and having fun with the other players. I always told you that I couldn't have been at a better place.

We sort of drifted apart over the years, which was sad but I can't explain why.

Sis; I will always have a special place in my heart and mind for you. You with that big contagious smile. Rest in peace sis.

You're in God's hands now where the sun is shining brighter and the sky is filled with majestic colors.

Love you, your big but little brother.
